

Reginald began his career in architecture as a sophomore in high school drafting strip centers, drug stores, and tenant improvements for big box retailers. He then began to specialize in residential architecture; designing luxury homes, townhomes, multifamily residences, and planned unit developments across the southeastern states of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida.

In 2007, Reginald transitioned to real estate development. Employed with industry leading organizations, Reginald cultivated his residential development skillset across single family (for sale and for rent), multifamily (affordable and market rate), and mixed-use communities nationally contributing to the delivery of over 10 fee-simple townhome communities, 3,200 class 'A' market rate multifamily communities, and 50 affordable homes.

WDP focuses on establishing strategic partnerships to pursue opportunistic developments across Central Florida and the Carolinas with a focus on middle market and institutional multifamily, and single family for rent developments.

A native of South Carolina and alumni of Clemson University, Reginald is a family man; married with two small boys.